A large eruption would likely result in pyroclastic lava flows, ash and pumice ejected up into the atmosphere, toxic gases and melting (Lahar) flows similar to those seen in California recently. [+] It continues to blow up in the city of Ligao, near Legazpi City in Albay Province, south of Manila on January 22, 2018. The nation's 22 active volcanoes, Mayon certainly the most active, with 51 eruptions recorded in the last 500 years. The symmetrical shape is due to a mixture of basaltic and andesitic lava flows adding layer following the sides of the volcano. While local authorities have closed some government operations and schools, they face a shortage of emergency funds. The volcano continues to show continuous seismic activity, spitting lava and thick clouds of ash covering the area, rising 10 km into the sky. Alert level 3 was released by the authorities and warned that the activity could lead to magma eruptions. An increase in the size and frequency of eruptions, changes in the composition of gases and ash released, and increased seismic activity could be indicators that a large eruption is coming. The province is waiting for federal financial assistance in order to evacuate more residents and coordinate emergency management teams. What will be the key is for geologists and volcanologists to monitor the volcano for signs of continuously increased activity. This perfect symmetry brings tourists to Mount Mayon in the Philippines and to the National Park nearby. park.
